

On Being in Debt

Wende Crow

Attention should only be paid to the mangrove trees and the shadows of their limbs on the water and the light between
and the water itself,
to the sun and the scull boat,
the charging clouds, the change.

A foot gains purchase on a sandy bank where the lagoon sinks into the sea.

Attention
should only be paid to the girl tossing
raw meat to the caimans and turning her back on the feed
and to the crack and growing dark above
and other miracles,

and to the first drops
embracing everything
and witness.
To a pair of eyes
sliding under the water.
To everything that's gone.
